

“I thought the Brothers would be very strict. But what I found was freedom—what I had been looking for the whole time.”

JOHN KIM
ALEXIAN BROTHER

For Brother John Kim, it all started with a First Communion photograph. After seeing the photo, his beaming Korean mother encouraged him to consider a religious calling. Years later in his adult life, Brother John was working as an X-ray technologist in California when his mother's idea took root. First he considered the priesthood, but found that becoming a religious brother was a better fit. He was particularly drawn to the Alexian Brothers and their community of prayer, kinship and support. Today, he's begun his "second life"—one that he fills with service, devotion and an occasional harmonica solo in his spare time. Since joining the Brothers eight years ago, Brother John has found a way of life that's in tune with his faith. To find out more about becoming an Alexian Brother...
